Descrizione

From Refuge Daviso you go down and cross walking half-coast many ups and downs along a steep grassy slope, which has many crossing streams and is interrupted at its base by high jumps, over the ravine of the Gura stream. That way you reach Ricovero Ferreri. After having passed the bivouac (path n. 316) you must be careful because the path passes on ledges particularly exposed, and it is easy to lose the correct track. On the right, you cross a little valley and its stone channel, from where springs out Rio Bramafam. You go head towards a grassy ledge, with ups and downs, that cuts the basal part of the stone wall from right to left. Once reached a rock basin, you go up on the right and climbing through some rocks, you arrive to a second ledge. This latter is characterized, halfway, by a large boulder attached at the wall. You go, without your rucksack, into the small space between the rock and the wall, and then, from the end of the ledge, go up through debris, to a third and final ledge, which allows you to arrive the wide channel culminating with the pass. You go further on snow and stones, and climb a low rocky area and on solid rock banks placed near the Passo delle Lose (2866 m). From the pass, you can enjoy a wide sight of the Gruppo della Gura, of the Levanna Orientale; of the Uja di Ciamarella (3676 m) and the Albaron di Sea (3261 m). You then descend on the southern side (path n. 316) along an easy ledge from left to right, thus reaching the base of the rocky wall below the pass; you continue through a wide basin of stone, then through some rocky banks and grassy slopes and finally reach the Alpe Gias Piatou (2200 m). At the beginning of path n. 308 you can choose between two options: 1. climb up left to the Bivouac Soardi Fassero. You continue along a grassy crest that goes up parallel to the valley, and at the first crossroad, take the path on the right (neglecting the one on the left). After the rest, you will still need to go back on the same way to go down to Gias Nuovo, where the next stage starts. 2. go down through path n. 308 and reach the plateau Gias Nuovo (1893 m), where next to the pasture stands a newly built bivouac.
